Atomic Learning

Website Overview

Atomic Learning is an online, video-based software training solution available for use by faculty, staff and students. A library of thousands of short, easy-to-view tutorial movies can be viewed on the St. John Fisher College campus as well as off-campus.

You can access Atomic Learning from on-campus computers without registering. However, if you choose to do this, you will not be able to track which courses you’ve taken (an option available under the My Tracking link in the upper right-hand corner of the Atomic Learning site). You may want to use this tool for professional development purposes; if you are a faculty member, you may want students to use this option to confirm that they’ve completed an Atomic Learning-based assignment.

In order to use the My Tracking option, and to access Atomic Learning from both on- and off-campus, you will need to register with Atomic Learning.

To access Atomic Learning without registering:

1. From an on-campus computer, open Internet Explorer or Firefox.
3. Click on Training Library, select Technology Skills and select a language.
